Inslee extends face covering requirement for businesses statewide and halts county advancements

Gov. Jay Inslee and Sec. of Health John Wiesman announced last Thursday a statewide requirement for businesses to require face coverings of all employees and customers. Under this proclamation, businesses may not serve any customer, services or goods, if they do not comply with the statewide face covering order. The extension comes in response to growing case counts in counties across the state. The proclamation will go into effect Tuesday, July 7.

“We’re doing this because of a spike in cases of COVID-19 all over the state,” Inslee said. “The better we can protect ourselves from the virus, the better we can avoid repeating some of the painful measures we had to take in the spring to shutdown the economy.”

“We must redouble our efforts to keep our physical distance, wear our face coverings and limit the number of people we see each week,” said Wiesman.

Wearing facial coverings, along with adhering to physical distancing, is one of the most effective ways of stopping the spread of COVID-19.

Gov. Inslee also ordered a statewide pause on advancing counties from their current phases under Safe Start. On June 29, Jefferson County applied to move to Phase 3. Now the earliest Jefferson County could move to Phase 3 is July 16.

“Until there are widely available treatments to suppress the spread and the effects of COVID-19, this fight continues,” Inslee said. “I know Washingtonians are up for the task.”
