FEMA to cut some PPE funding

According to a report obtained by National Public Radio (NPR), effective Sept. 15, FEMA will no longer reimburse states for personal protective equipment to include face masks used in non-emergency settings such as schools or courthouses. According to Keith Turi, a FEMA assistant administrator for recovery, “supporting schools and other functions—courthouses and other related functions—are not a direct emergency protective measure and therefore not eligible for Public Assistance. Another FEMA official stated PPE for schoolteachers, election poll workers, town or city clerks, public works employees, medical staff and all other government employees to perform their day-to-day duties would likely not be eligible for FEMA reimbursement. The official further stated costs for PPE will be considered an operating cost for public agencies as opposed to an emergency cost. Wildfire smoke could drift into Puget Sound region

The Puget Sound Clean Air Agency has reported that wildfire smoke from California fires could drift north into the Puget Sound area today and tomorrow. Pollution levels could reach an unhealthy state for sensitive populations. If the air looks or smells smoky, limit time spent outdoors. For more information go to www.pscleanair.gov/wildfires.

Washington declared best state for workers

Oxfam America, an organization working to end poverty, has ranked Washington as the number one state for workers based on protections, healthcare and unemployment during the COVID pandemic. More information here:
